

Welcome

Issue 06 Spring/Summer 2011

Data entry closed on February 28 and we are thrilled to announce that we have had an excellent response rate from the 361 participating services in England and Wales. Over 11,700 service users returned our "talking treatment" questionnaire and we have received data for around 52,000 patients in the retrospective audit of patients completing therapy between 1 Sept and 30 Nov 2010. Coupled with the return of nearly 4,000 therapist questionnaires and service context questionnaires for each participating service, this is sure to make some very interesting findings. Our national report is due to be published in October and our individual service reports are scheduled to go out shortly before this. Continued on page 2...

What's new?

Since our last newsletter we have appointed a new Project Worker, Colleen Roach, and Nici Gideon has come back from maternity leave as a part time Project Worker. We are delighted to welcome Colleen and welcome back Nici to the NAPT team and have included a quick interview with Colleen below.

We are currently analyzing the mass of data that has come in and producing the national and local reports. Thank you all for helping to make the data collection phase so successful.

Q2: THERAPIST'S QUESTIONNAIRE

Almost 4,000 therapists throughout England and Wales filled out the questionnaire between August and December 2010, and we are currently analyzing the findings. The questionnaire looked at therapists' training, therapies they delivered and membership of professional bodies.

Q3: RETROSPECTIVE AUDIT

Data was submitted for this questionnaire by our registered services between December 2010 and February 2011 and we have received data for around 52,000 patients. Participating services collected data detailing demographic information, care pathways, waiting times and outcome measures for patients ending therapy between 1 Sept and 30 Nov 2010. With the help of expert advisors based at the Centre for Psychological Services Research at the University of Sheffield we will look at how services are performing against the audit standards relating to waiting times, equity of access, outcomes and whether the therapy provided is in line with NICE guidance.

Q4: TALKING TREATMENT SURVEY

We have been overwhelmed with the response from service users for this questionnaire and received over 11,700 back across England and Wales. After picking a census date between October and mid November 2010, services sent out a questionnaire to service users who had at least one therapy session with the service for anxiety and depression before the chosen census date. The NAPT team will look at service user satisfaction in the areas of access to therapy and outcomes. Qualitative data from the questionnaires will be analysed thematically by our service user researcher, Eleni Chambers.

Introducing our new Project Worker

Colleen worked at one of our NAPT services before joining us so has seen both sides of the audit

Lauren: I wonder if you could introduce yourself and say a bit about how you are settling into the NAPT team?

Colleen: My name is Colleen Roach and I joined NAPT as a project worker at the end of March. Although this is only my second week in the project I have settled in very well due to how great the team have been. My previous experience was working as a researcher for the Institute of Psychiatry on a number of audits assessing the implementation of the NICE guidelines for depression and anxiety. NAPT was offering an incredible opportunity to work on improving the provision of psychological therapies at a national level so I am very happy to be working here with a fantastic team dedicated to improving mental health related care.

Lauren: What made you initially want to join the audit team?

Colleen: I have experience of working in roles within the NHS primary and secondary care psychological therapies. So I was always interested in improving the psychological support service users receive. My previous role was working in audits and research assessing the implementation of the NICE guidelines for depression and anxiety within one NHS trust. I thought the role with NAPT was the perfect opportunity to help the audit and work towards improving psychological therapies nationally.

Lauren: What is the most exciting aspect of the project for you?

Colleen: The most exciting aspect of the audit for me is the contribution it will make towards improving mental health care across England and Wales. Overall, I believe this will help reduce psychological distress and improve mental well being of service users, which is something I am extremely passionate about.

Lauren: What has been the most challenging aspect of your role so far?

Colleen: Although I have previously worked on audit and research projects this is by far the biggest I have ever been involved in. I joined the team during a very busy period as they were working towards a number of deadlines for one part of the project. The most challenging aspect of this was catching up on all the work the team had previously done, which was a huge amount. However, the team being so friendly and well organised really helped me in combating this.

Lauren: What expectations do you have for the audit as a whole?

Colleen: I believe the audit will help identify areas for improvement to improve the standard of care service users suffering depression and anxiety receive. In addition, I think the fact so many different trusts are involved is fantastic as it allows us to identify what appears to be working and what does not.

A Service Perspective: Taking Part in NAPT

Elizabeth Hancock, Deputy Project Manager for NAPT interviews Louisa Rhodes from Southwark CMHT about her experience of taking part

Elizabeth: Could you briefly describe your service and why you decided to take part in NAPT?

Louisa: I was service lead for two services in the audit:

1) A secondary care community mental health service which is made up of 5 teams covering one London Borough. Each team has a psychologist and occasionally trainee clinical psychologists are also based at the services.

2) A primary care 'Improving Access to Psychological Therapies' Service which is made up of low-intensity and high-intensity psychological therapists offering CBT based interventions.

Elizabeth: What was your overall experience of the audit and the audit team?

Louisa: My overall experience of the audit was excellent. The audit team were very well organised and provided very clear instructions on how to participate. The team sent timely reminders about the completion of data inputting and were always quick to answer queries.

Elizabeth: What have been the most positive aspects of NAPT?

Louisa: Participating in the pilot audit gave us a chance to see some preliminary results for our service and help the audit team make positive changes to the audit questionnaires.

Elizabeth: What aspect of the audit has been most challenging?

Louisa: When the therapists in our services already have very busy workloads it is difficult to ask them to complete even more paperwork. However, once we had found a way to make their participation easier this was much less of a problem.

Elizabeth: What benefits do you anticipate from participation?

Louisa: It will be good to see how our results compare to other similar services and to identify areas where we are doing well and where we could do better.

It will also be very helpful to see the service-user questionnaire results to identify what changes could be made to benefit service-users
