

REGISTER YOUR INTEREST

Relational Practice: The heart of meaningful work

Date: Friday 7 July 9:30am - 3:30pm

Venue: Royal College of Psychiatrists, 21 Prescot Street, London, E1 8BB

Cost: Free

Could organisations and professionals do a better job of supporting us?

Relational practice is a way of working that recognises the primary importance of the quality of relationships. It is the foundation upon which effective interventions are made, and it forms the conditions for a healthy relational environment. It is relevant across all sectors, fields and specialties; formal research is now being undertaken and published to show evidence of its importance, and relevant training programmes have been commissioned by the NHS.

This free one-day conference will bring together those who are familiar with working in this way with others who are interested, to launch a Relational Practice Manifesto which will raise awareness of its relevance in provision of a wide range of services. As well as members of the college and other clinicians, we are inviting key individuals from social care, criminal justice, education and other settings – including those involved with policy, commissioning and management of relevant organisations.

Spaces are limited, to register your interest: click here

The conference is being hosted by the College Centre for Quality Improvement's Enabling Environments and Community of Communities projects and is funded by NHS and HMPPS.

For queries about the event, please contact eadmin@rcpsych.ac.uk