JISC update December 2019-January 2020

Very little JISC conversation over this period - we await the explosion of COVID-related discussion later in the year.

How to best manage hypersexuality in dementia

A clinician wonders if there was literature/advice on hypersexuality management in fronto-temporal dementia for a patient in his 80s. He has no comorbidity and his cognitive function is relatively well preserved; and there has been no change in his behaviour despite significant environmental modification and a SSRI. She has used anti-androgens in younger male patients but not in this age group.

She was considering finasteride or a progestogen.

There are significant forensic risks as well with ongoing criminal justice involvement.

Respondent one: Is aware that her colleagues treating older adults in the community use Cyproterone not infrequently.

Respondent two cited an excellent CPD online article from the Royal College of Psychiatrists on this topic - by Singhal and Tomar from 2015.
